

THE PACIFIC
Commercial Advertiser.
HAWAIIAN LEGISLATURE.
House of Representatives.

EIGHTH-FIRST DAY—August 5.

Mr. Rhodes introduced a Joint Resolution: That His Majesty be requested, at the earliest date possible, to appoint a commission of five persons to fully and thoroughly investigate the sanitary condition of the country and the causes of its depopulation; and to suggest remedial measures therefore. The said Commission to report to His Majesty the King within six months from the date of its appointment. And further, that $1,000 be appropriated to defray the expenses of the said Commission. And that His Majesty the King be requested, on receipt of the report of the Commission of Investigation to take such constitutional measures to save the evil as the report of the Commission may suggest to date. Ordered for Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Harris read the first time a bill amending the law relating to adultery and fornication by entirely exempting females from criminal punishment, and imposing double the present penalties on male offenders. The bill was rejected by a large majority.

The Articles of Amendment to the Constitution, that had been adopted, passed their third reading.

The bill authorizing a loan of $100,000, passed its second reading without opposition. Adjourned.

EIGHTH-SECOND DAY—August 6.

Mr. Widemann of the Committee of Finance reported on the communication from the Minister of Finance. Report adopted and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Harris also of the same Committee presented a long report relating to the communication and to the new statistical tables of the Minister. These Reports will appear in another paper of this issue.

Mr. Blaize's Joint Resolution for a Commission to investigate the sanitary condition of the people, was debated in Committee of the Whole, and referred to a Select Committee. Messrs. Rhodes, Dowssett, Baldwin, Kipi, and Kaauwai.

The third reading of the bill authorizing a new loan, was postponed, until the relations of the House with the Minister of Finance had been satisfactorily settled. Adjourned.

EIGHTH-THIRD DAY—August 7.

No business being presented the House adjourned.

EIGHTH-FOURTH DAY—August 8.

Mr. Rhodes of the Select Committee, reported in favor of the Joint Resolution for the appointment of a Sanitary Commission, with amendments. Ordered for Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Dowssett of the Conference Committee, reported the action of the Committee on the Appropriation Bill, that they had compromised on all the items of non-concurrence in the Bill, save the salaries of the Ministers and of the Second Associate Justice, Supreme Court. The House adopted the action of the Committee, except on the items for the War Department and for expenses of the Legislature; further, the salaries of the Ministers, together with the salaries of the Ministers and Second Associate Justice, was for the present waived.

A long debate ensued on a motion to restore the Appropriations for the Ahinahina school, and the school of Mr. D. Walsh, which had been struck out by the Conference Committee. The House finally concurred in the action of the Committee by a considerable majority, which called forth a protest against suspending the religious freedom of the children, and the refusing assistance to Catholic schools, on the ground of the intent being Government schools, while taxation was levied equally upon all. The House voted to strike out the article, and to add a new clause to the effect of the original intent.

The protest was signed by Messrs. Blaize, Widemann, Pomaikai, Kankau, Barenaha and Manini.

In California: The tariff on alcohol and all spirits other than brandy is 50 cents per gallon, and the price of New England rum, 20¢ a gallon. The tax on beer is 25¢ a gallon, and on porter 40¢ a gallon. The tax on gin, 25¢ a gallon, and on whisky 33¢ a gallon. The tax on rum, 25¢ a gallon, and on brandy 33¢ a gallon. The tax on beer is 25¢ a gallon, and on porter 40¢ a gallon. The tax on gin, 25¢ a gallon, and on whisky 33¢ a gallon. The tax on rum, 25¢ a gallon, and on brandy 33¢ a gallon.

Something has been said about this people swindling and dying off, and the idea still remains that it is in consequence of the debilitated condition of the natives, from the diet of raw food, which leads to the prevalence of the small pox among them. Whether Hawaiian whigs distill from rum, we do not know.

Certainly it would not be consumers had a sufficient amount of rum to drink, if there were no distillation of rum. But the man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, is bound to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men? But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a means of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

But Mr. Speaker truly me that there is not much made of rum. I am told that the rum is sold at a high price, and that it is a spirit which is not easily sold.

As a source of wealth it is less estimated. The superfluous wealth of the country is derived from what it was formerly. And when the "pig" root is spoken of as a means of wealth through distilling, it is not possible that men are acquainted with the subject of their first one is an argument? How would a man who is fond of hukuhiva himself, be compelled to sell his portion in a plantation, or to drink a spirit which he is unable to sell to the sweat-hut men?

<p